

asked nothing but wind, sly interlude. At the far what winner of the race, graphs please see page
Photo by Joseph Gresser

...the judge's deliberation could leave the case's speedy resolution hanging in the air.

Defendants who enter a plea agreement with the state have the right to withdraw a plea if the court refuses to go along with the prosecutor's recommended sentence.

Suspicion against Ms. Tollman arose when she was unable to provide a report to the fire chief on the department's finances in August 2010.

(Continued on page thirty-four.)

In Derby Line Third farmer contracts for a wind tower

by Joseph Gresser

DERBY LINE — The developers of a proposed two-turbine wind project here said Tuesday evening that they plan to begin the permitting process soon and hope to have construction under way in about a year.

After the meeting, which was held to discuss plans to put up a tower on each of two Derby Line farms, Phil Letourneau, who owns another farm nearby, said that he, too, has signed a contract with Encore Redevelopment to put up a tower on his land.

"It's coming," Mr. Letourneau said. But it will follow construction of a 425-foot tall tower on Grand View Farm, which is owned by Bryan and Susan Davis, and another erected at Chase Farm, owned by Jonathan and Jayne Chase.

Chad Farrell of Encore showed site plans and view shed maps to a gathering of about 25 people at the Derby Line Village Hall Tuesday night. The reception that he and his team met was mixed.

While all three Derby Line Trustees were present their participation in the discussion was very limited. The two Derby selectmen who attended, though, vigorously aired their differing opinions.

When Mr. Farrell told the gathering that his company wants to be completely open about its plans for the project, Derby Selectman Karen Jenne pointed to the company's view shed map. It appeared to cut off a ten-mile circle at the Canadian border. Ms. Jenne asked if Stanstead officials had been informed about the project.

Mr. Farrell and his colleague Nick Richardson, who assisted in the presentation, said, yes, they have been notified.

Ms. Jenne said she has spoken to members of the Stanstead City Council and found them to be in the dark about the project.

Matthew Farlan, a former (Continued on page thirty-six.)